

The first of these is the fact that the government has been unable to secure the necessary funds to carry out its policy. This is due to a combination of factors, including the high cost of borrowing and the low level of savings. The second factor is the lack of a clear strategy for the future. The
 agree on a long-term plan for the economy, which has led to a series of short-term measures that have not been effective in the long run. The third factor is the corruption within the government and the private sector.
 This has led to a loss of confidence in the government and its policies.
 The fourth factor is the lack of investment in infrastructure and human resources. This has led to a decline in productivity and a loss of competitiveness.
 The fifth factor is the lack of a strong legal system. This has led to a lack of enforcement of laws and regulations, which has further eroded confidence in the government.
